CHARLES E. MOHR

is director of the Audubon Nature Center at Greenwich, Conn., where sessions are held each summer for adults interested in nature and conservation. A leading educator in the nature field, he is past president of the American Nature Study Society and president of the National Speleological Society. His articles and wildlife photographs have appeared in a number of national magazines.

"New Worlds For The Bird Watcher"

Writes CHARLES E. MOHR: "To look at the moon with the naked eye and then through a telescope is to discover the same sort of new world that a bird watcher finds when he starts using a topnotch binocular."
